

"The Next Red-Hot Wine Region" - Wine Spectator

"The Estrella bench is now one of California's most important sources of Cabernet Sauvignon grapes. For that reason alone it lies, in every sense, at the heart of the Paso Robles appellation." - Gerald Asher, Gourmet

"...like Napa winemakers, those in Paso Robles make some of the most distinguished, award-winning wines this side of Bordeaux, particularly Zinfandels and Cabernet Sauvignons." - Sunset

"One region that is gaining attention for zinfandel today flourished in the first decades of the century: Paso Robles." - The Wall Street Journal

"The wine history of this wine region is fewer than two decades old, yet there are already the makings of great wines from Cabernet Sauvignon and Zinfandel - and many other red wine grapes are coming on quickly as plantings increase." - Dan Berger, wine critic

"Although few know anything about the viticultural area surrounding the town of Paso Robles in central California, it is slowly emerging from obscurity on the strength of some of this country's most alluring red wines." - The Washington Post

"Paso Robles reminds me of what Napa was like in the '70s. I think in the next decade or two we'll see fine restaurants and destination resorts - and a lot more wineries." - San Diego Union-Tribune

"Most of the wineries are small, the kind where there's a very good chance that the person behind the tasting room counter is the winemaker or someone related to him or her." - Jerry D. Mead

"The Central Coast is like Provence - not Nice or Napa. Everything is very down-to-earth. The appearances of what they do may be lowbrow, but the presentation is exquisite. The quality of the wine is very high." - Sunset

"The land is prime, the people are energetic and the climate - in both senses of the word - is ripe for activity." - Patrick W. Fegan, Chicago Tribune
